I am writing a set of C functions for a particular class of problems on SCIP, a MIP programming framework. I am using Visual Studio 2013 to develop the project. It was suggested that my code is faster on gcc (the compiler we use is Intel C) than MS Visual Studio. So I figured I would build my project in gcc and then run it on my Windows 8 computer. I have never used gcc and will probably need a good primer on using it. I did find that my C code is as follows: #include #include #include #include #include #define N 1e6 int a[N]; int b[N]; int main() { int i, x, y; for (i = 0; i < N; ++i) { x = a[i]; y = b[i]; if
