As the data is passed in it is expected to match the type. Here is what I have so far. Note that I can't change the record being returned as I have no control over what the caller passes to the function. type BaseRecord = { Id: int } static member New() = BaseRecord() member this.Id = this.Id type CustomerRecord = inherit BaseRecord new() = { Id = 0; } type RetailerRecord = inherit BaseRecord new() = { Id = 0; } let dbAction(record:BaseRecord) = match record with | :? RetailerRecord as l -> Console.WriteLine ("Retailer") | :? CustomerRecord as l -> Console.WriteLine ("Customer") dbAction This compiles fine. My problem is that the compiler complains that it can't find "CustomerRecord" and BaseRecord in the constructor. So there is clearly something wrong with the syntax. Is there any way I can make this work? I have a similar function where I pass in a BaseRecord type and have it return a different type. In this case it's all fine, but I can't figure out how to deal with a record with a generic type parameter and a constructor. A: You don't need to inherit from the record to
